

Often out of sight are the nests of shorebirds like hooded plovers or our little penguins that can deep dive 30 metres with their tiny wings. When we go lightly, Bruny's 12 endemic bird species relax with us; our rainforests cool and coastlines vast. There's a vulnerability to Bruny and its wild locals that is both beautiful and asks us to protect it. We care for Bruny. She cares for us. She lets us reconnect. Reset. Join her rhythms.

By its very nature, Bruny is wild. It allows us to disconnect. Perhaps even the chance to gift yourself a digital detox.

There is a freedom in exploring this remote island, but we must also be aware. After all, the next stop is Antarctica. A sunny bushwalk can morph into a rainy one. Gravel roads require extra care and there are patches where mobile phones are out of range. So be safe out there.

The presence of Bruny's Traditional Owners runs deep – Aboriginal voices echoing in the winds, the trees, the oceans. Community remains strong today.

Across the island you'll discover stories of custodianship, courage, tragedy and survival. You'll experience significant sites. Know how special they are.

Our locals are a friendly bunch. They like the real things: handmade, hand caught and hand crafted. Some have been here generations, others holidayed and stayed. We hope you love the island like the locals do.

- ★ lunawanna-alonnah is a Nuenonne Aboriginal name for Bruny Island.
- ★ The Quarantine Station was used during the 1919 Spanish Flu pandemic.
- ★ Murrayfield is a 4100 hectare working sheep station, owned by weetapoonna Aboriginal Corporation.
- ★ Mt Mangana is named after Aboriginal leader Truganini's father.
- ★ The top of Cape Bruny Lighthouse is 114 metres above sea level and was first lit in 1838.
- ★ Spot the two trees at Two Tree Point which existed when Captain Cook landed in 1777.
- ★ When viewing little penguins at The Neck, cover torches with red cellophane.
- ★ Make sure you look up!
You may see magnificent white bellied sea eagles soaring above.
- ★ Look out for the rare white wallabies living on South Bruny Island.
- ★ Bruny Island is home to the 12 bird species endemic to Tasmania.
- ★ The Fluted Cape is one of the highest sea cliffs in the southern hemisphere.

